I don't get how it's logistically possible, since even a launch from Israel or Jordan, according to the range of NATO aircraft WOULD require a mid-flight refuel.

So it would need to be a ballistic strike or, they would need to launch from Iraq or the (not-so) secret airstrips.

Yes, but I was assuming Israel, would want to stealthily strike Natanz, and not launch from say, UAE, on account that,

1. they would be tracked on radar
2. it would disintegrate M/E relations and that would be an open declaration of war.

Yes. I’m sure Iran has drone swarms capable of taking out a B52 from over 1500 miles away. Oh and the US may have hypersonic air launch missiles already, which means they’d have about one minute of warning before impact, and they don’t travel in a predictable trajectory that can be easily intercepted

As crazy as it sounds; I think, there will be a 'false flag' assassination attempt on Trump. Either he will 'die' or he'll survive - either way it'll be justification for what happens next. Such as scenario would have far fewer moving parts, and I wouldn't be surprised if SS get a little sloppy durings transition periods. After all, he was enjoying himself on the golf course.

Iran however, is smart so they won't attack which delays the Iran war for at least 4 years until Ivanka runs, assuming she wins in 2024

From what i've heard most fighter jets have trouble with steep AoA angles and can't keep up speed. More or less "fall out of the sky".

So if it was flying really high i guess it would give you an enormous tactical advantage as an escort crew protecting it.

Yeah, you pretty much have that right. The B-52 used to have a tail gun even, but the newer designs have removed it entirely due to how unlikely it is that any interceptor would make it there. However, the most important part of US air doctrine is securing air superiority. The whole idea is to not even allow any interceptors to take off to get to the bombers. Escorts aren't needed when the enemy can't even launch planes to begin with.

Usually when this stuff is over represented in the media, it's a sign of projecting. Otherwise, if they will attack, they won't make it obvious and try to attack by surprise.

You don't even rate POG and you'll never be a woman. You sound like a petty, uniformed, underachieving faggot trying to project your worthlessness on those of us who are actual door kickers with firsthand knowledge and experience in the region, I don't have to have fought an Iranian commando to know that they're only a step or two above the ANA/ANP. I bet they're not much more, if at all, better than the Iraqi Army. They don't even have the advantage of exclusive regional knowledge because if you've fought in Afghanistan, especially the mountains like I have, then you're going to be well prepared for what iran will be like but instead a uniformed and slightly better equipped troops backed up by more conventional means than the Taliban in terms of resources and infrastructure due to being an actual, established military. Yes, Americans will die when and if we go in, and by the way I'm not in agreement of war with Iran, just correcting your uninformed statement that is a direct result of a series if incorrect assumptions based on a lack of knowledge how the US military works and what it's capable of. Quit talking out of your ass, you're just being a contrarian child who has absolutely no clue what he's talking about. If you come in too close straight below them you are sucked into their drive field and ripped apart by distorted space time. Happened to an American P-51 Mustang in the late 40's. I've read one encouter report where an american heli got close below but not too close, they were lifted a couple of thousand meters into the air without experiencing any sense of acceleration and "disconnected" without any harm.

They cant send B-52s into iranian airspace, they are as vulnerable as a cargo plane. They will be used as stand off platforms for cruise missiles.

Yep, forgot to address that, but you're 100% correct. This faggot is trying to make it out like they'll be facing some army of Iranian nationalists ready to die. Lol I guarantee we'll hear reports of Iranian soldiers going AWOL if the US does end up going to war with Iran. I'm sure our average POG is better trained and equipped than the average Iranian soldier and for sure that our conventional infantry has superior training and equipment, plus we have the advantage of firsthand experience with the terrain from OEF deployments. Granted, there's a lot of guys who don't have the combat experience of those of us from early OEF/OIF but they're going to be lead by guys who were E-1 - E-4 during early OEF/OIF and that alone gives us a decent advantage and even if the younger soldiers haven't done as much or any fighting outside of SOF and pilots, a lot have still deployed to Afghanistan is recent years so they're not completely inexperienced and still have firsthand experience with the region, it's terrain, and what not so they won't be completely "green". I know it's fun for people to shit on the military but they have no clue what they are talking about and it's usually just petty, jealous, underachieving perpetual children who are projecting because they feel self conscious about their shitty station in life.

iranian military has some serious issues with conscripts committing suicide in basic boot camp. Common story, but they are severely out of touch with reality and well your average iranian kid right now don't really see a good reason to die for a government that keeps 70% of its population under poverty line (common trait among all socialist regimes, this one is just larping as religious) while spending all the money they have hidden away to funding houthi attacks on ksa and hezbollah.
I believe we tried and there was some firefights and commotions within anti-ayatollah types and sepah factions after salami got salami'd but this shit is proving impossible. At bare minimum their entire armed forces have to be disarmed of any kind of nuclear/biological and chemical weapons and new government in place with their own armed forces to suppress die hard fanatics. We are reasonably sure now at least half to a million iranian die hards need to die before this shit is resolved. Unarmed protests and chanting isn't cutting it anymore.

These fuckers are all going to larp their way to hell.

This is a joke right?

First of all, their radar signature is bigger than that of any cargo plane.

Knowing that, why do you think we still have them and everybody still fears them like Armageddon is going to start after lunch?

They are 70 years old. 19 have been lost in combat.

The B-1 carries more bombs, is faster, and is less visible (by a magnitude of 10) to radar. The B-1 is going to be retired. The B-52 is getting new computers and will be around for another 70 years, smokey engines and all.

19 have been lost in combat. Out of 10s of thousands of sorties. That is a better ratio than anything on the planet. They are big fat lumbering gas-guzzling bomb trucks that, if the pilot manages to stay awake on his 28 hour trip from Louisiana, will rain down more bombs in one shot than the krauts dropped in a year during WWII.

They aren't sexy in any way. They are more like the plumber that shows up late but always gets the job done.

Also that attack on Abqaiq last year went through because I believe some said there was a traitor in saudi military ranks who made sure AA defenses were distracted/inactive.
It's the saudi military's job to defend their kingdom. At this point we are simply providing backup assurance if shit really blows up hard and checking overt iranian actions.

OH NOOOO OUR FLEET IS OUTDATED WE NEED TO BUY NEW COOLER ONES

The 2037 Bomber[1] is the unofficial title of a projected program to develop a heavy strategic bomber for the United States Air Force. Intended to serve as a replacement for the Northrop Grumman B-2 Spirit, the aircraft is projected to enter service by around 2037 as a new generation ultra stealth, supersonic, all weather, long-range intercontinental heavy bomber aircraft with capability for unmanned operation.[2]

With the ending of B-2 Spirit production in 2000, the U.S. Air Force was left with a gap in its bomber development. A new bomber would be needed in the 2037 time frame to replace retiring B-52s and B-1 Lancers according to the Air Force's Bomber Roadmap, released in 1999.[3][4] This was considered too long to wait, so the Air Force commenced the Next-Generation Bomber program (later the Long Range Strike Bomber program).[5][6]

And yet, we have invested billions in 70 year old air frames instead of vastly (((superior))) ones like the B-1 or B-2 because ???

You can shoot RPGs at a bulldozer all day and do jack shit. You hit a Porsche with an RPG and its vapor. The Porsche is obviously the preferred vehicle for racing... unless people are shooting missiles at you.

The B-1 is the greatest machine ever made. It most likely won't survive a hit from newer missiles. The B-2 sacrificed speed and capacity to avoid new missiles. The B-1 and B-2 are being retired. The B-52 doesn't care. Just needs more gas.

You aren't getting it. Nobody fucking cares if a fucking sam hits a b-52 because its just going to keep guzzling gas on its way to the LP.

The whole point of my initial comment was that nobody cares about what could happen to a B-52.

The B-1 is the most capable aircraft ever developed on planet earth, has a larger payload than the B-52, is 2x as fast, with 1/10th the radar cross section ... and its getting retired. The Russians are trying to bring back their TU-160s for the same reason that they copied the B-1 in the first place, but they too are working on a replacement.

At the end of the day they still have their TU-95s and we still have our B-52s because both were designed to survive being caught in their own nuke detonation.

Sams don't mean shit when you are talking about something engineered to those standards.

The B-52 no longer carriers nuclear gravity bombs. They are being converted to ALCM trucks. B-1s and B-2s also carry the ALCM. So why not get rid of the B-52?

The B-52 will be the airborne platform for the LRSO, not the B-1 or B-2. Why use an 80 year old platform instead of the newer bombers?

Its because of theater surviveability. A B52 isn't sneaking up on anybody. You can hear the engine whine hours before it actually shows up and can see the smoke from half the globe ... take all the shots you want. It's still coming and will still get to where it wants to go.

Anybody else noticed a VERY distinct lack of military aircraft broadcasting all day today? there's usually a solid 100 or so worldwide visible on adsb and roughly half are over the US but today there's been like 20 max worldwide
